NEW

1.   A computer system to present to a user data about the condition of a hydrological structure comprising:

a database for receiving and storing data about the structure; at least one data source for providing data about the structure;

a communication network for transmitting the data about the structure from the data source to the database and for transmitting from the database to a user;

a user interface for presenting to the user the data transmitted from the database.